

Going Global: Global Education

Knowledge-Based Economies for 21st Century Nations

About the Book

The chapters are a rich collection of case studies, concepts, projects, experience and interpretations from policy makers, practitioners and institution leaders right at the forefront of international education developments. Edited by Mary Stiasny and Tim Gore of the University of London the book arises from the presentations, discussions and sessions held at the highly successful Going Global 2013 conference in Dubai, attended by over 1,300 world leaders in international education. In keeping with the themes they explore how international collaboration facilitates the following: research and innovation, increased skilled knowledge workers and internationalised education structures and systems. Going Global is a series of international educational conferences hosted by the British Council, offering an open forum for policy makers and practitioners from around the world to discuss issues facing the international education community.
